Here is the statement we've been using on the ongoing testing of other vehicles. Let me know if you have any questions.

EPA doesn't confirm the status of preproduction vehicles until manufacturers introduce them into commerce to respect any potential confidential business information. It is true that diesel vehicles are getting extra scrutiny and that has extended the certification process longer than normal. In general, manufacturers have been supportive of this additional testing and have adjusted their timing to account for the additional test duration.

I had briefly mentioned before Mercedes' plan to substantially redo some of their (b) (4)

Joerg Breuer has reached out to us to let us know of their plan to communicate the updated manufacturing schedule to their dealers. I very much appreciate Joerg reaching out to us but have a significant number of questions about their plans that we should know the answers to before Mercedes communicates their plans externally. I have reached out to the company to schedule a call and will get you a complete summary as soon as I know more.
